CHAPTER 1

INTRODUCTION

Violence against women teachers became a political issue in Sweden during the period from 1900 to 1940. By 1900, 66 percent of Sweden's teachers were women, many of whom worked in isolated rural areas, where they faced loneliness and the threat of male violence. Politicians, teachers, and female authors debated a number of solutions to reduce these threats, such as providing the teachers with guard dogs, weapons, and telephones.

In Pakistan, a negative relationship was found between the formal level of education a woman attains and the likelihood of violence against that woman (After, 2013). The researcher used snowball convenient sampling, a sampling method where participants are referred. Ethical and privacy issues made this the most convenient method. An informant played a major role in gathering information that was then cross-checked. The sample of victims of violence was made up of married women from ages 18–60 both from rural and urban communities. The study described different forms of physical violence that are already present and provided an idea of what women go through, even across communities (rural and urban). Education in this study was stressed to be the solution and a necessity in eliminating violence. A discussion of political and social barriers is needed.

The relationship is a lot more complicated than it seems, women can be illiterate but still become empowered (Marrs Fuchsel, 2014). Immigrant Latina Women (ILW) were part of a qualitative study of 8 to 10 participant groups, at a time, and completed an 11-week program centered on self-esteem, domestic violence awareness, and healthy relationships. Immigrant Latina Women (ILW) is a highly affected group by domestic violence. Though this program took place outside of a traditional classroom, dialogue, critical thinking, and emotional well-being were stressed, areas that should be acquired while in school. Lastly, though many of the women were illiterate they were still able to come away with a stronger sense.

Education systems and schools play a central role in determining girls' interest in various subjects, including STEM subjects, which can contribute to women's empowerment by providing equal opportunities to access and benefit from quality STEM education. A systematic review on vocational and business training for women in low- and middle-income countries summarized the evidence from thirty-five studies regarding the impacts of such training programs. The authors found that these types of programs have small positive effects on employment and income with variability across studies. They found that the effects of training may increase with a stronger gender focus of the program.

CHAPTER 2: OVERVIEW OF THE COMMUNITY

Methodologies :

The domestic instruction of girls of course depended for its thoroughness and for its precise scope upon the circumstances of the household and the opinions and capacity of the mother. Swift, in A letter to a very young lady on her marriage, declares that not one gentleman's daughter in a thousand can read or understand her own language or "be the judge of the easiest books that are written in it." "They are not so much as taught to spell in their childhood, nor can ever attain to it in their whole lives." Mary Astell, the "Madonella" whose "seraphic discourse" and "Protestant nunnery" furnished Swift with topics for coarse satire, was a great admirer of Lady Mary but a reformer on different lines.

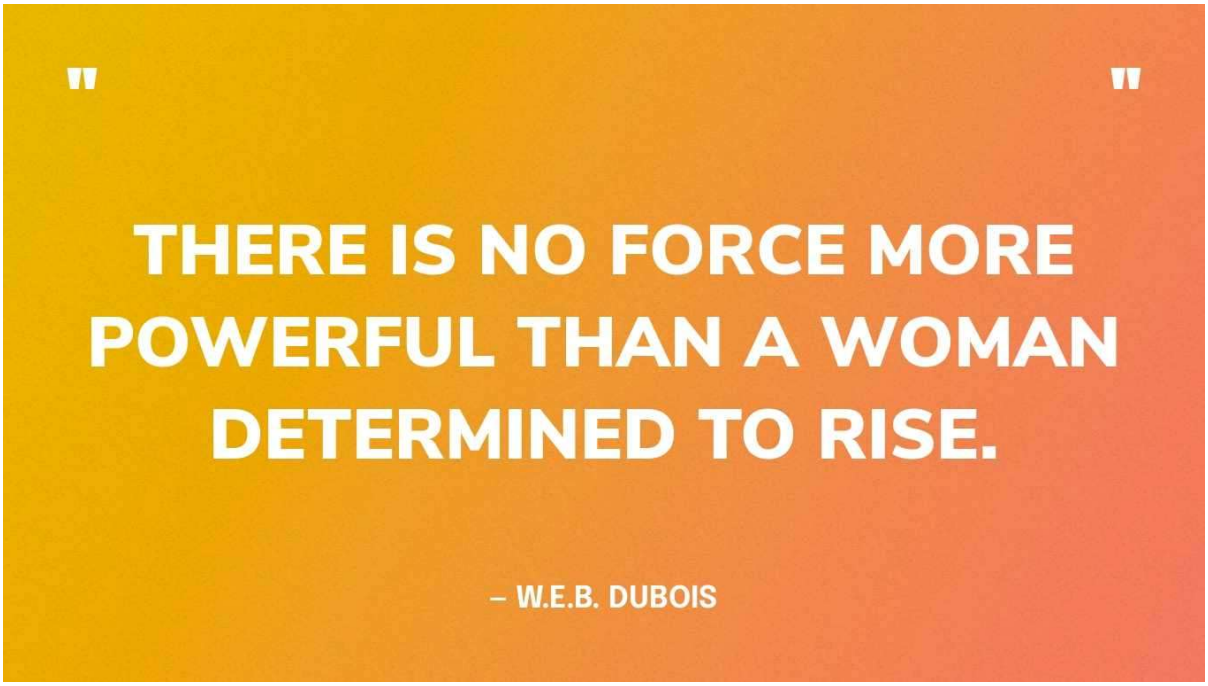

Fig 1 : Determination

1.2 Progress

Taking Sub-Saharan Africa as an example: in early 1960, the gross enrollment rate of girls in primary education, secondary education and higher education was 25%, 1% and 0.1%, respectively. By 2006, the figures were 89%, 28% and 4%, respectively. While the enrollment rate of women at all levels is increasing, the gender parity index is also improving. In sub-Saharan Africa, the gender parity index for primary school enrollment in 1980, 1990, 2000 and 2006 was 0.77, 0.81, 0.89, and 0.92, respectively. In some countries, women's gross enrollment ratios even exceed men's gross enrollment rates, such as the Gambia, Ghana, Malawi, and Zambia.

Challenge

Compared with men, women in most African countries have been disadvantaged in education, and the higher the level of education, the more unfavorable the situation. One of the most important reasons for this "vertical separation" is that girls' academic performance is worse than that of boys, and the percentage of students who can graduate and pass the exam is low.

Prime Minister Narendra Modi-led NDA government has decided to rise the legal age of marriage of women to 21 from 18 years. Increasing the minimum legal age required to marry to 21 would give them time to pursue their studies and offer an opportunity to pursue higher education.

Why is education important for women

Girls' Education is important from every perspective of life and society. An educated woman leads a healthier life as compared to the uneducated woman. They participate in the family matters & in the outside world too, earn well, marry at a considerable age and plan a family in a better manner. Not Only do Women take the right decisions for themselves, but they also provide better education and health care options to their children as well as to the family. All these factors together can help to eradicate poverty, crimes and disease rates. It is an important element for the foundation of a strong Nation.

"When You Educate a Girl, You Educate a Nation." ~ Helene D. Gayle

3.1 Scenario in backward areas

According to the statistics released by the latest census of 2011, India's female literacy rate is 65.46%, lower than the world average of 79.7%. In India, Kerala has the highest female literacy rate with 91.98% rate, but states such as Bihar has 51.50% the lowest female literacy rate. Girl education in India is still a less preferred option in rural areas. Their girls are not given proper education as compared to boys. It has always been a matter of discussion, especially in backward regions. Not even in rural but also in urban cities, people were not willing to send their daughters to the school.

Role of Education in women Empowerment

Empowerment means moving from a weak position to execute power. In simple words, Women empowerment can be understood as giving power to women to decide for their own lives or inculcating such abilities in them so that they could be able to find their rightful place in the society.

Factors affecting the issue

- Poverty or low family income, lack of education, inaccessibility to health facilities and lack of knowledge are important factors for depriving girls from education.
- Violence and various other crimes against women deprive them of gaining sound education.
- Lack of basic educational facilities.
- Negative attitudes of parents about girls' education.
- Lack of parental encouragement.
- Political interference in school management.
- Non-availability of specially designed room for Library.

Change in scenario

Time is changing now; girls today are crossing the borders of their houses and doing wonders. Girls who were presumed to be physically weak are now joining the army, navy, air force, wrestling, shooting and every other field that was once considered to be the male-dominated regions. Time has changed now and the girls who are trusted by their parents and the society are doing wonders in every field. Indira Gandhi, Kiran Bedi, Kalpana Chawla, Latha Mangeshkar, Mother Teresa, Pratibha Devi Singh Patil, etc. are some of the great examples.

3.2 Benefits of girl's education

- Educated girls are working in every sphere of society such as banks, hospitals, private firms, and government offices
- Girl education has also led to their economic independence and gender equality. They are capable of taking their own decisions and fighting against crimes such as dowry, child marriage, trafficking, etc.

Here are 6 facts from our report that will make you think differently about girls' education:

1. 130 million girls are out of school. If this were the population of a country, it would be the 10th largest nation in the world.
2. An additional year of schooling for girls is estimated to result in almost a 12% increase in wages.

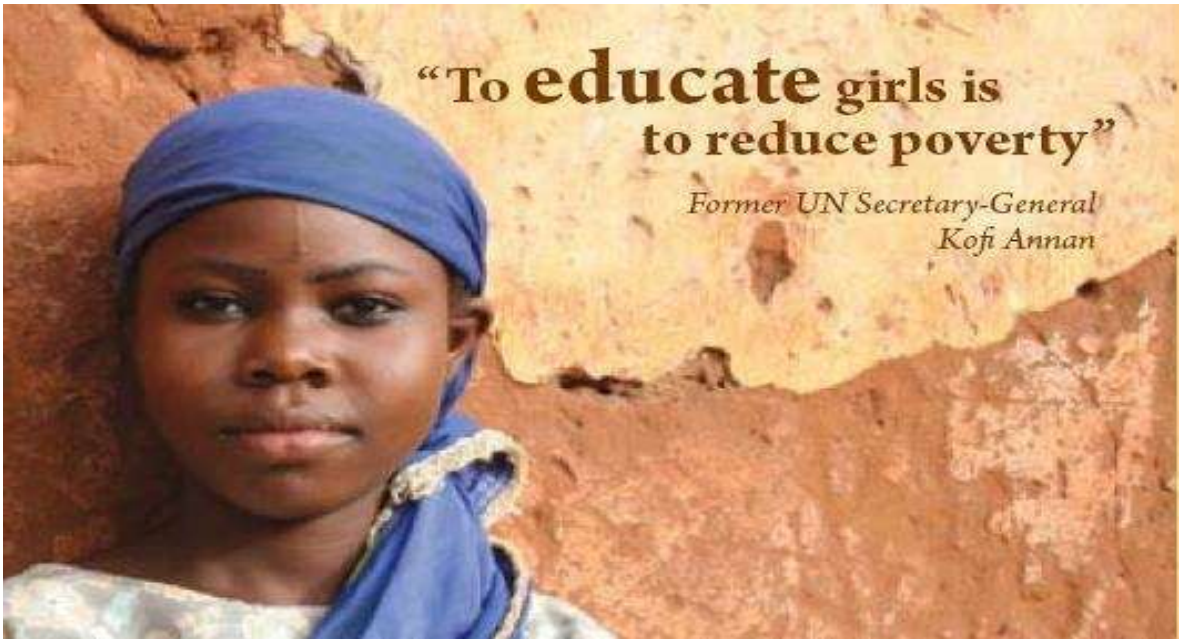

Fig 2: Importance of Girl Education

3. If every girl completed a primary education in sub-Saharan Africa, maternal mortality could fall by a dramatic 70%.
4. Only 34% of girls in sub-Saharan Africa are able to complete lower secondary school, while 42% of their male classmates do.
5. Girls' schools are targeted three times more often than boys' schools and attacks on girls' schools increased 17-fold between 2000 and 2014.
6. The cost of a 12-year education in the poorest countries ($1.17 per day) costs less than a loaf of bread or a newspaper.

Why we should support girl's education

Education is very important for every child whether boy or girl. It is sad that some communities still discriminate against the education of the girl child. 5 million children not getting a primary school education live in low and lower-middle income countries – 44% in sub-Saharan Africa, 19% in south and west Asia and 14% in the Arab states, UNESCO said.

1. Future Educated Generation.
2. Decrease Infant Mortality.
3. Decrease Material Morality
4. Decrease Child Marriage
5. Decrease Population Explosion

Short-term and long term action plan for possible solutions for the problems identified and that could be recommended to the concerned authorities for implementation.

Suggestions: There are still many challenges ahead but the following changes will all contribute to future success:
➢ Organize workshops to educate women on managing finances, accessing credit, and starting small businesses.
➢ Establish services to help women find employment opportunities and provide resume-building assistance. Implement short-term training programs in skills like tailoring, handicrafts, and computer literacy.
➢ Organize regular health camps offering free medical check-ups, reproductive health education, and counseling services. Conduct safety audits in the community to identify and address areas where women feel unsafe.
➢ Establish helplines and counseling centers for women experiencing domestic violence. Provide free legal advice and services to women to help them understand and exercise their rights.
➢Develop microfinance schemes to provide women with small loans to start or expand their businesses. Partner with local businesses and industries to create sustainable employment opportunities for women. Establish permanent vocational training centers offering diverse skill development courses.
➢ Develop long-term scholarship programs for girls and women to pursue higher education. Improve educational infrastructure, including schools and libraries, to ensure a conducive learning environment.
➢ Invest in healthcare infrastructure to provide comprehensive healthcare services, including maternal and reproductive health .Establish mental health services and support systems for women dealing with psychological issues.
➢ Advocate for policies that promote gender equality and protect women's rights at the local and national levels. Work towards increasing women's representation in local governance and decision-making bodies.
➢Offer advanced IT and tech courses to help women pursue careers in technology. Support women in starting tech-based businesses through training, mentorship, and funding opportunities.

What would it take to improve girls' access to education?

According to UNICEF, experience in scores of countries shows the importance, among other things, of:

- Low-cost and flexible timetables -- Basic education should be free or cost very little. Where possible, there should be stipends and scholarships to compensate families for the loss of girls' household labour. Also, school hours should be flexible so children can help at home and still attend classes.
- Schools close to home, with women teachers -- Many parents worry about girls travelling long distances on their own. Many parents also prefer to have daughters taught by women.
- Preparation for school -- Girls do best when they receive early childhood care, which enhances their self-esteem and prepares them for school.
- Relevant curricula -- Learning materials should be relevant to the girl's background and be in the local language. They should also avoid reproducing gender stereotypes.

Malala Yousafzi, the Pakistani schoolgirl brought to England after being shot in the head by the Taliban, will address the United Nations today. She will mark her 16th birthday by delivering a speech at the UN headquarters in New York to call on governments to ensure free compulsory education for every child.

It will be the teenager's first public speech since she was attacked on a bus in Pakistan's north-western Swat valley after standing up for her right to go to school in her home country.

She will tell a delegation of more than 500 young people: "Let us pick up our books and pens. They are our most powerful weapons.

"One child, one teacher, one pen and one book can change the world. Education is the only solution. Education first." Join hands and support #education for all boys and girls. No one should be left out. #MalalaDay

Importance of girl child education in India

India is still far from achieving gender equality and its skewed sex ratio of 940 females per 1000 males bears witness to this fact. A girl child in India is often seen as a liability, a 'burden' to pass on. Given the prevailing influence of patriarchal values, right from their birth, a lot many girls bear the brunt of gender inequality, gender stereotypes and are treated inferiorly, as compared to boys.

No matter how talented and ambitious she is, the girl child often receives the shorter end of the stick. In fear of exploitation and abuse, many girls are not sent to school and kept at home only to be married off early. And even if she is not married off, the young girl is still denied a deserving education, quality

Survival as the first challenge

While there are laws that ban sex-determination of a fetus and selective abortion, this practice continues in the shadows. This not only negatively impacts the number of girls born, but also affects the health and safety of the mother. Consecutive pregnancies with the hope of a boy take a toll on the physical as well as mental health as it is the woman who gets blamed for the sex of the baby. Stricter implementation and monitoring of laws, and better awareness, is essential to help the girl child survive.

Hurdles in receiving quality education

Recent national data reveals that the dropout rate for girls at the elementary level are 4.10% which rises to 16.88% at the secondary level, with the figures being substantially higher for girls from vulnerable groups (19.05% for SC and 24.4% for ST groups) (U-DISE 2015-16). The retention rate of girls at the elementary level is 70.6% which drops to secondary level is 55.5% (U-DISE 2016-17). Due to existing attitudes regarding girls' education, safety concerns, distance between home and school, lack of affordable sanitary napkins, absence of separate and functional toilets, and poor school infrastructure, several teenage girls tend to become irregular in attending schools or drop out before completing their schooling. Only one in every three girls in India completes school education ageappropriately (U-DISE 2016-17)

Child marriage

Out of the 12.15 million children married in India, 8.9 million are girls, and married girls are three times the boys. As per Census 2011, there are about 3 million children below age 14 that are married. Rural girls constitute 55% of married children. Child marriage robs girls of their childhood as they step into adult roles that they are unprepared for – be it managing households, bearing children, making decisions and so on. It not only hampers her schooling but also pushes young girls into early pregnancy which harms the health and nutrition of the teenage mother as well as her child.

Abuse and violence/safety concerns

A girl child is an easy target and is usually at the receiving end of abuse and domestic violence, which more often than not goes unreported. In rural areas, parents are reluctant to send their daughters to school fearing their safety. Latest data released by the National Crime Records Bureau also reveals that kidnapping, abduction and sexual offenses against children were among the top two crimes committed against children. 28% of all rape victims were girls under age 18 and out of the total number of children that went missing in the year 2018, 70% were girls.

Women Education in India Essay is suitable for students of grades 7, 8, 9, 10, and competitive exam aspirants.India is a developing economy and considered one of the largest democracies in the world. It is expanding in many areas of development, which is vital to the growth of the nation. Along with economic and infrastructural development, there is also a need for social development. Education is necessary for the growth of any country. In India, women have traditionally been confined to household work and taking care of the family. Patriarchy is the root cause; many did not believe in educating women; instead, a female child was seen as a burden, and getting married was the only way. Another reason why families shy away from educating their daughters is the lack of safety and security. Traveling during the night and living on their own instigates fear among the families as well as the girl child. Crimes against women are on the rise, and this prevents them from receiving an education. Low income forced parents to educate only the boy child, believing that he is the only breadwinner for the family while the daughter stayed at home.The need for women's education goes back to times of independence. Savitirao

Phule and Jyotiba Phule were advocates for women's education and set up an institution for girls in 1848. Women were participants of the freedom struggle. The demand for women's education has been on the rise. During the time of independence, the female literacy rate was at a meager 8.6%. According to the latest census, the female literacy rate in India is 65.5%. Though it has seen a rise, India has not met the world average of female literacy rate.

OBJECTIVES OF SURVEY

Society is combination of many genders, races, cultures and traditions. But in include of all the aspects education is a must for anyone. Even if they are of rich or poor, men or women. To develop a country, citizen should be educated. And the main objective for the survey is to spread awareness about the women education and their higher studies. And it also includes:

1. Educating the women will empower them to seek gender equality in the society.
2. Women will be able to earn that would raise their economic condition and their status in the society.
3. They will be aware about the advantages of small and planned family and this will be a big step towards achieving stabilized population goals.
4. Education of women would mean narrowing down of social disparities and inequities. This would automatically lead to sustainable development.
5. Good For Community an educated woman with increased earning potential is more likely to give back to the community than her male counterparts.
6. Decreased Chance of Abuse by Delaying Marriage and Child Bearing: Educated woman is much less likely to suffer domestic abuse than their illiterate counterparts.
7. Intergenerational Success: more educated mothers mean fewer mother and child deaths and illnesses. The loss of a mother can be disastrous for the chances of her children's survival and future welfare.
8. Decreased Child Mother Mortality Rate's: educated women are more likely to marry later in life, pushing back the age that they have their first child.
9. Intergenerational Success: more educated mothers mean fewer mother and child deaths and illnesses. The loss of a mother can be disastrous for the chances of her childern's survival and future welfare
10. : when girls are kept out of school in developing countries, they are usually working in the home on domestic chores. Girls spend 33 to 85 percent more time per day on unpaid domestic chores than boys of the same age.
11. Better for the Environment: Brookings refers to female education as the "cheapest, most cost-effective mechanism for reducing emissions." This is due to projected population growth.

12. Reducing Terrorism and Extremism: One of the more surprising advantages of female education is that it can work to reduce.
13. Rights when women in a society are more educated, more emphasis is placed on gender equality. As women achieve equality, human rights become a strong value of communities, as women in leadership tend to fight for disenfranchised groups.
14. Increases Literacy Rate: Nearly 63% of the world's 163 million illiterate youngsters are female. By providing Education to all children, literacy rates will rise, boosting development in undeveloped.
15. Mental Health: Increased access to education for women improves maternal health. An additional year of education for 1,000 women is known to help avoid two maternal deaths.
16. To enable women to improve their family's health and diet.
17. To improve women's social and culture status.
18. To enable women to discharge their responsibilities more effectively (UNESCO, 1 985).
19. Helping women to fight their own fears and feelings of inadequacy or inferiority
20. Educating women in all round development. That is mentally, socially, physically, psychologically, religiously and economically.
21. To make women participate fully in all the affairs of their nation and to be at Centre of sustainable development.
22. To make women able to acquire their own basic needs of the society, like food, shelter, fuel, clothes and nurturing.
23. In terms of economic and human development.

Women Empowerment has Five Components:

1.Women's sense of self – worth.
2.Their right to have and to determine choices.
3.Their right to have access to opportunities and resources
4.Theis right to have power to control their own lives ,both within and outside the home
5.And their ability to influence the direction of social change to create a more just social and economic order,nationally and internationally.

CHAPTER 6: RECOMMENDATIONS AND CONCLUSIONS OF THE MINI PROJECT

CONCLUSION

To spread awareness among the people about the need and significance of Girl education more efforts have to be taken by the government and the Society. Education, in general, is important for everyone and an educated girl is no less than any boy. Time has come when parents must start showing equal faith in the girl child too, only then the society and the nation would be called a "Developed Nation".
